Get Them Reading with Lacuna!

Have you ever found yourself wondering whether an assigned reading passage was too hard, or if students just hadn't read it at all?

Do you wish there were ways to elicit more diverse voices in your classroom discussions?

Perhaps you've wished there was an easy way to model reading strategies for struggling students, or a techie way to help students pull quotes for essays.

Check out Lacuna - free digital annotation software that makes the process of reading social and engaging.

When: Wednesday, November 28, 2018, 5 – 7 p.m.

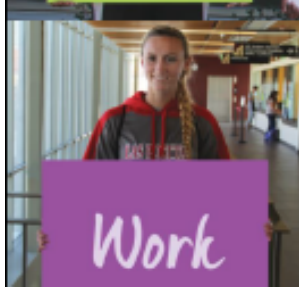

Where: Room 1013

Presenters: Kat King, Katie Eagan, and Angelo Bummer

The first part of our meeting will highlight the many ways Lacuna can add to your English classroom. See which of your students are reading and which aren't. See which areas of a text students are struggling with or misunderstanding. See how your students understand more than you think they do, and are making observations that never even occurred to you. See the way social annotation gives voice to the diverse populations in your classes - from introverts to extroverts, from those who are struggling to those who are high performing, from our immigrant students to the students from down the street.

The second part will be dedicated to helping you explore Lacuna. Plan to leave with materials - copies and digital resources - you can use or adapt to your classrooms.

Please RSVP to Elena Cole, ecole@jaspositascollege.edu; that way we're sure to have enough computers!

What a wonderful one-day workshop! The next week people were talking about it all over campus! I am beyond thrilled with the enthusiasm your workshop generated. I was inundated with requests for "clean" copies of the handouts from your session at our division meeting. Thank you for all of the practical, as well as fun, teaching strategies.
